Household Inventory and Insurance Record from Unigard®

Insured to value for proper protection

In addition to being important in the event of loss, this record can be used as a guide in determining the amount of insurance you should have for proper protection. When completed, it shows at a glance the general trend of values ... upward ... a pattern that applies to houses as well as to furnishings and personal effects. If your policy has not been adjusted to these increases, you may be dangerously underinsured. Make it a point to review your values and keep them adequately insured.

Identify your possessions – Marking possessions with an identifying number can be an effective method of deterring burglary ... thieves find it difficult to dispose of stolen articles that can be traced through the owner's personal number.

An identifying number could be your drivers license number or a special identification number which is issued by your state licensing agency. Inscribing tools are available that do the job neatly and easily.

In this inventory record, articles recommended for marking have been noted with an asterisk.

My identifying number is

Photograph your possessions and property

This simple precaution provides an irreplaceable reference file which, when making a loss statement, is the best way to establish the original condition and value of personal property.

Photos supporting this property inventory not only expedite claim estimates, they become tax-deductible under such circumstances.

Remember to store your negatives in a fireproof container away from home.
